

Critical Race, Gender & Sexuality Studies, B.A.

Critical Race, Gender & Sexuality Studies is a leading academic discipline that prepares students to help transform the world. As a community of scholars, teachers, and learners from the interdisciplinary fields of ethnic studies, women's studies, and multicultural queer studies, we aim to create a just and sustainable world by analyzing systems of inequality and strategies for empowerment and agency. With a critical examination of race, class, gender, sexuality, dis/ability, and nation as intersecting categories of identity, we aim to dismantle systems of oppression through knowledge, activism and resistance. Our critical approach is intersectional and comparative; our focus is local, national, and transnational.

Experience Your Learning

Along with hands-on scholarly research and activism, students engage in innovative theoretical and empirical work that advances and enriches current knowledge and critical dialogue about culture, politics, and public policy in local, global and transnational contexts.

We produce CouRaGeous Cuentos where students become published authors.

We host Humboldt's annual Hip Hop Conference where students organize, perform, and present for the event.

Multiple internship options allow students to put theory into practice and to connect their campus experience to a broader community involvement.

Our students and faculty take part in the Campus Dialogue on Race and the Social Justice Summit.

Did you know?

- CHECK IT, a bystander intervention movement led by students, originated in CRGS through our Act to End Violence course and was recognized at a White House event hosted by then-Vice President Joe Biden.
- Our journal production, CouRaGeous Cuentos invites local high school students to publish their testimonios.
- We offer certificates in Ethnic Studies, Women's Studies, and Multicultural Queer Studies that focus on social justice, empowerment, and transformation.

Academics & Options

Critical Race, Gender & Sexuality Studies, B.A.

Critical Race, Gender & Sexuality Studies draws on intersectional lenses that enable students to see connections and opportunities between fields, to understand multiple perspectives, to excel in a variety of work environments, to model cultural competencies, and to be engaged citizens who aim for transformative change.

The program brings together disciplines such as the arts, politics, economics, history, popular culture, and sociology to provide a skill set focused on enacting social change on the local and global scale

Careers

Graduate with core skills in critical thinking, research, writing, and organization. The curriculum foregrounds dialogue and active learning and students gain strong communication and leadership skills. Graduates will be prepared to enter fields like politics and government, law, business, social services, activism, community organizing, as well as graduate school.

- Education
- Community Organizing
- Social Work
- Government & Public Policy
- Social Services
- Violence Prevention
- Counseling
- Law
- Health Care
- Journalism
- Marketing and Business
- Broadcast and Social Media

Entering college, I was hungry for classes that would give me the tools to analyze the injustices that I saw in the world around me, and to fight for social justice. Critical Race, Gender & Sexuality Studies is a place to build community with other students and teachers who care about creating social justice. It is also a place to learn about yourself and to grow as a person. It is also a place to build the critical thinking, team work, writing, problem-solving, and visionary skills necessary for all kinds of careers."

Jess Whatcott ('04, Critical Race, Gender & Sexuality Studies), Assistant Professor of Women's Studies at San Diego State University, affiliated faculty with the LGBTQ+ Studies program